FINE IN COMEDY

The Rankin Company Appears in the Magistrate.

MR. STOCKWELL AS FUNMAKER

Work of Others in the Cast—Miss O'Neil—Carr and Trimble—Leslie Morosco as a Boy.

A first-class comedy. players well placed in their parts, a crowded and a sympathetic house, continued success of the Nance O'Neil Company. This is the theatrical "account rendered" right along now. Honolulu has a bonanza and the visitors of the stage are not doing poorly in any way.

There were slight misgivings over the understanding that a company opening and scoring a triumph in Magda should essay The Magistrate. All doubt is dispelled. Mr. Rankin has organized a repertoire company of the topmost stock standard.

L. R. Stockwell, whose face will never guarantee him a commission as a matinee hero, had the center of the stage nearly all of last evening. The imitable drollery of his interpretation of Judge Posket was not to be resisted. He was faithful to the character through and through and to those who watched closely gave a treat in facial expression and the by-play that brands the true comedian as master of his art. Stockwell was immensely funny without resorting to any cheapness or trickery. He portrayed to a nicety the magistrate just as one studying the piece would conceive the titular character. There is fibre and strength in the comedy of a talented and experienced man like Stockwell that is at once appreciated by an intelligent audience.

Whether or no Miss O'Neil is too young to be correct as a matron of thirty-five is likely a debatable question. She was excellent as the wife for the second time and the spouse of the magistrate, was vivacious at times, was acceptable throughout, was strong at acting in several of the scenes. But it may honestly be said that Miss O'Neil takes comedy with a bit too much seriousness. She was beautifully dressed and in the dialogue and appearance of the morning after the night of misadventures struck comedy notes clear.

Miss Gertrude Foster had a good part and did full justice to it. Several times she shared the honors fairly with Miss O'Neil. Miss Foster was chic as the modern young lady, was gay and pleasing in the love passages and like Miss O'Neil was effective in the hysteria of the lines.

Miss Affie McVicker was quite too girlish as the governess or musty teacher. This young lady undeniably has talent and is in good hands for the development of it, but appears to lack confidence in herself and her voice.

Carr was at his best last night, not a bit like Herbert Carr, but entirely like the British officer he personated. Carr is good enough in comedy for any company.

It was like old times to hear Mr. Rankin use the patois of a French landlord. Next to his phenomenal career in The Danites, Mr. Rankin has scored his greatest success in his own play, The Canuck, in which he was a French-Canadian. Mr. Rankin was exceptionally at home last night in the scene in which he handles the several persons in the mix-up in the restaurant.

Leslie Morosco last night had his first chance of the season. He was praised by all, fairly capturing the house. Mr. Morosco was a boy in the play and his work was in every way quite up to the mark.

George Trimble, be he Englishman or American, was absolutely faultless as a young Englishman. This character is too often made farcical, but Mr. Trimble spared any of the pains incident to the excess so common in the stage personage labelled a young Britisher.

Mr. Tuther, who is perpendicular, is the equal of Rankin and Carr in vertical, contributed much to the fun of the evening. Mr. Tuther is a bit on the eccentric or "different" order.

H. A. Weaver, in the few minutes he was on the stage, did satisfactorily what was called for by his character. The minor personages of the play were in capable hands.

The Magistrate is a refined comedy with a distinct plot. It is from London, is by Pinero and was one of the greatest hits of the Daly company in both London and New York.

Thursday night, Leah, the Jewess; Saturday matinee, East Lynne; Saturday night, Oliver Twist.
